2.1 Citizen Science Water Monitoring Citizen Science is a form of crowdsourcing using trained volunteers to help collect data that traditionally was not financially, spatially, or temporally feasible in large scientific research projects (Gura, 2013). These projects are becoming increasingly popular in part due to their demonstrated success gathering data and because they are more easily

Workshop WG2 Building a community network for educators

With the Citizen Science COST Action, ECSA and the new EU-Citizen.Science project, we now have at least three international players in Europe and, in addition, many countries have national Citizen Science hubs; connecting Citizen Science with the education sector is a main goal for most of them. With a growing number of key players, the risks of duplications, competition and fragmentation
