What is the difference between a distributed system and a

Not every distributed system can be considered a computer network though, where by computer network I mean a telecommunications setup. For instance, your laptop is a distributed system (multiple CPU cores, devices, communicating over a variety of buses), but this isn't typically within the domain of computer networks.

Distributed networking Wikipedia

Distributed networking, used in distributed computing, is the network system over which computer programming, software, and its data are spread out across more than one computer, but communicate complex messages through their nodes (computers), and are dependent upon each other. The goal of a distributed network is to share resources, typically to accomplish a single or similar goal.
