Historical Sociology and International Relations Convenors. Kamran Matin University of Sussex. Bryan Mabee Queen Mary, University of London . BISA's working group on historical sociology and IR is both a return and a fresh start. It is a return because what we are proposing is to reacquaint two long standing friends who have recently become strangers - history and sociology. But the working <http://elevatecoworking.co/Historical-Sociology-and-International-Relations-bisa-ac-uk.pdf>

Sociology and International Relations The Future

Students of international relations have responded to those developments by absorbing elements of historical sociology within their frameworks of analysis as John Hobson's contribution to this issue will attest. But the number of scholars who specialise in exploring linkages between sociology or historical sociology and international relations, though increasing, still remains small.
