Molecular Mechanisms Of Desensitization To Signal Molecules

The similarities of the molecular mechanisms of activation and desensitization in the various systems are striking. In the first book (1987) on this topic, the functional and structural similarities of the various mechanisms to attenuate the effect of an outward signal were emphasized. Justification to have a second book three years later is the explosive growth of information in the field

Molecular mechanisms of membrane receptor desensitization

Desensitization via receptor-specific kinases The rapid desensitization mechanisms affect receptor 'function'. Phosphorylation of the receptors is a critical step in these mechanisms. The most rapid and quantitatively most important mechanism is triggered by phosphorylation of the receptors by the specific β -adrenergic receptor kinases (β SARK [16-18]). These kinases phosphorylate only agonist-occupied, active receptors. Two mechanisms serve to maintain this very strict agonist dependence

Molecular mechanism of desensitization The EMBO Journal

The lack of CCR 5 desensitization in HEK 293 cells in the absence of GRK overexpression suggests that differences in cellular complements of GRK and/or arrestin proteins could represent an important mechanism determining cellular responsiveness. When tested, the activity of CCR 5 as an HIV 1 co receptor was dependent neither upon its ability to signal nor its ability to be
