On July 1, 1994, Japan's national legislature, the Diet, enacted the country's first law specific to products liability: the Product Liability Law (Law No. 85, 1994) (PL Law). The law, which introduced the concept of strict liability and expanded the definition of a liable manufacturer, went into effect one year later, on July 1, 1995.

International Product Liability Laws FindLaw

Like Europe, the rise of product liability standards in Asia means that manufacturers and retailers must pay even more attention to quality, product safety and product liability than in the past. In addition, all manufacturers who sell in the U.S. must consider the effect of compliance with foreign safety laws and standards on U.S. litigation.

Compliance with Product Safety Standards as a Defense to

Unfortunately, on the flip side, compliance with all applicable laws and regulations is not, for most products, an absolute defense in a product liability case. Therefore, a jury could come back and say a manufacturer should have exceeded laws and regulations pertaining to safety.
