Networks a new paradigm of rural development

In the first, I examine those approaches concerned with networks in the agro-food sector. The reason for prioritising agro-food is quite simply that the sector is still the most significant user of rural land and land is a key marker of rurality (see Marsden et al., 1993).

Agri Food Commodity Chains and Globalising Networks

Agro-food literature began to turn away from this scale-centric form of theorising in the late 1980s with the rise of the commodity chain analysis and food regime scholarship.

The Globalization of Organic Agro Food Networks

1. Introduction Over the past two decades the organic agro-food system has been transformed from a loosely coordinated local network of producers and consumers to a globalized system of formally regulated trade which links socially and spatially distant sites of production and consumption.
